Introduction

The Military Intervention by Powerful States (MIPS) project attempts to develop a rigorous, generalizable measure of the effectiveness of military force as a policy instrument and to apply the measure to code the outcomes of all foreign military interventions conducted by five major powers since the termination of World War II. The MIPS dataset provides detailed data on American, British, Chinese, French, and Russian uses of military force against both state and non-state targets between 1946 and 2003. In particular, this project focuses on the political objectives strong states pursue through the use of force, the human and material cost of their military operations, and measures of intervention outcomes relative to the intervening states' objectives. The dataset also includes extensive data on factors commonly hypothesized to be associated with war outcomes like the nature of the target, the type of force used by the intervening state, and military aid and assistance provided to either the intervening state or the target. The military operations contained in this dataset involve uses of force ranging from naval blockades to aerial bombardment to large-scale ground combat.

1. Unit of analysis

The MIPS project defines military intervention as a use of armed force that involves the official deployment of at least 500 regular military personnel (ground, air, or naval) to attain immediate-term political objectives through action against a foreign adversary.

- To qualify as a 'use of armed force', the military personnel deployed must either use force or be prepared to use force if they encounter resistance (see Tillema, 2001 for a similar definition of 'combat-readiness'). The deployment of military advisors is considered a use of force only if the advisors actually engage in combat.

- To be 'official,' the deployment of national troops must be authorized by a state's political leaders (Pearson and Baumann, 1993).

- The deployment must be intended to attain immediate-term political objectives through military action, or the imminent threat of military action, against another actor. Routine military movements and operations without a defined target like military training exercises, the routine forward deployment of military troops, non-combatant evacuation operations, and disaster relief should be excluded.

- Foreign adversaries can be either state or non-state actors like insurgent groups and terrorist organizations. A military operation that targets a state's own citizens and is conducted within a state's internationally-recognized borders (e.g. China's use of force against Tiananmen Square protestors in 1989) should be excluded unless both citizenship and borders are in dispute by an armed independence movement in territory claimed as national homeland by a distinct ethnic group (e.g., France in Algeria, China in Tibet, and Russia in Chechnya).[1]

[1] Other researchers may wish to exclude these operations, which are identified in the dataset as operations to 'Maintain Empire' by the variable objcode.

2. Sources and Methods

The research team attempted to identify all military interventions by the five states that are currently permanent members of the UN Security Council (hereinafter referred to as the 'major powers') between April 1945 and March 2003. In order to compile an exhaustive list of all possible major power military interventions, we identified potential cases from Pearson and Baumann (1993) International Military Intervention, 1946-1988 (updated by Pickering, 1999; Kisangani and Pickering, 2006); Herbert K. Tillema (2001) Foreign Overt Military Intervention; Regan's (2002) data on interventions in civil conflicts; the UCDP/PRIO Armed Conflict Dataset (Gleditsch et al., 2002; Eriksson et al., 2003); and the Correlates of War Militarized Interstate Dispute, Intra-State War and Extra-State War datasets (Jones et. al., 1996; Sarkees, 2000; Singer and Small, 1994; Small and Singer, 1982). We then looked for additional cases that met our case selection criteria in reference books including Butterworth's (1976) Managing Interstate Conflict, Clodfelter's (2002) Warfare and Armed Conflicts, Jessup's (1989) Chronology of Conflict and Resolution, and Keesing's Contemporary Archives/Record of World Events.

The focus of this project is on the ability of states to achieve their own political objectives through the use of military force. We do not create separate intervention cases for each major power state that participates in a multilateral military operation (e.g., the United Kingdom in the Vietnam War) to avoid distorting the data by counting one intervention with one primary objective and one outcome as two or three separate events. An intervention is coded only for the major power that was the primary motivating and contributing force and the contribution of allies is noted in the variable COALITION. We also do not create an intervention case for operations conducted by multilateral organizations (e.g., the UN, NATO, OAS) unless one major power could be identified as the primary motivating and contributing force (e.g., the U.S. in the NATO air campaign against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in 1999), or a participating major power had an agenda that was distinct from that of the multinational organization and pursued a particular outcome for its own purposes (e.g., the U.S. in Lebanon in 1983-84).

After a list of intervention cases was created, two coders were assigned to each case. Each coder worked independently using a coding worksheet (Appendix A) and the operational definitions contained in this codebook. A Boolean logic decision procedure was employed to code the political objective category and outcome variables (Appendix B).[2] Each coder consulted at least three sources approved by the Principle Investigator. Sources include scholarly studies, newspapers, chronologies of international events, and government and military records. The dataset indicates which of the over 200 primary and secondary sources were used to code each case and a full bibliography of sources is available at the end of this document (Appendix C).

[2] A third coder was assigned if scores on the key variables OBJCODE and ATTAIN1YR did not match after the worksheets were completed. Any remaining ambiguity about the objective and/or outcome code is noted in the dataset under NOTES.

3. Variables

Intervention Identifiers

CASE: Unique three digit code identifying the military intervention. Assigned by the Principle Investigator.

MP: Correlates of War (COW) country code (ccode) for intervening state.

MPALPH: Three letter intervening state identifier.

STDATE: Day, month, and year intervention began. STDATE is the date at least 500 regular troops (ground, air, or naval) from the intervening state arrive at the location of the conflict or, in the event that more than 500 military troops were already stationed at the conflict location, the date the troops begin military operations on location. Military operations could include air, sea, and/or long-range missile fire; small unit raids; commando operations; and/or large-scale ground combat operations. If a precise start day could not be identified, STDATE is coded as the first of the month.

ENDDATE: Day, month, and year intervention was terminated. ENDDATE is coded as the date either, (1) a peace treaty or other agreement between the parties that terminates the intervening state's combat role is signed; (2) the intervening state's combat troops have been withdrawn to less than 30% of their maximum strength; or (3) the intervening state decisively attains its primary political objective and begins to pursue a different objective (see OBJECT below), whichever occurs first. In the event that a peace treaty is signed but the intervening state's combat role does not significantly diminish, the conflict will be considered ongoing until 70% of the intervening state's combat troops have been withdrawn. If the major power terminates an intervention through either a formal agreement or withdrawal of 70% of its combat troops and then re-introduces troops, the two operations are coded as separate interventions.

LOCATION: Location of conflict (state, territory, or area).

LOCALPH: Three letter identifier of primary country in which the intervention takes place.

LOC: Correlates of War (COW) country code for conflict location. Note: The country code for the country that currently exists at the conflict location is given even if the country was not a state at the time of the conflict.

INTERVENTION: Descriptive name of the military intervention. Assigned by the Principle Investigator.

STYR: Year intervention began.

COW: Correlates of War (COW) case number for military interventions that occurred in the context of a war that appears in the COW inter-state war dataset. See http://cow2.la.psu.edu/.

MID: Correlates of War Militarized Interstate Dispute (MID) case number for military interventions that occurred in the context of a dispute that is coded in the MID dataset.

UCDP: UCDP/ PRIO Armed Conflict Dataset case number for military interventions that occurred in the context of an armed conflict that is coded in the UCDP/ PRIO dataset (Gleditsch et al., 2002; Harbom & Wallensteen, 2007).

Actors

TARGET: Name of the primary target of the intervention. The target is defined as the state (e.g. Iraq), group (e.g., al Qaeda), or persons (e.g., coup leaders) against which military operations are directed and from which the political objective of the intervention is sought.

STTARG: Correlates of War (COW) country code for the target if the.

TALPHA: Three letter identifier for the target if the target is a state.

TARGTYP:

Coding

0	state and state-supported institutions
1	insurgents/ guerilla movement
2	rioters/ mass movement
3	coup leaders
4	terrorists/ war lords
5	state and insurgents

Definitions

State	Any of the official institutions of a sovereign political entity. Following Gleditsch and Ward (1999), we consider an actor to be a state if it 'a) has a relatively autonomous administration over some territory, b) is considered a distinct entity by local actors or the state it is dependent on' (398).
Insurgents	A group of armed, irregular personnel organized along military lines to conduct a systematic campaign of military and paramilitary operations against the established system of government in a state or colonial territory.
Rioters /Mass movement	Groups of individuals engaged in spontaneous or organized protests which could escalate to violence.
Coup leaders	A small group of individuals who have, or are attempting to, remove and replace state leaders through extrajudicial means.
Terrorists	Clandestine groups and individuals who engage in premeditated, politically motivated violence against primarily noncombatant targets.
State and Insurgents	The conventional armed forces of a state fighting a campaign against another state in coordination with an insurgent movement within that state.

STATE: Dummy variable coded 1 if the target is a state as defined above or coup leaders that have seized power in a state.

T_MP: Dummy variable coded 1 if the target is a major power.

COALITION: Dummy variable coded 1 if other major power states committed military troops to assist the primary intervening state (MP).

COUNTER: Dummy variable coded 1 if another major power state committed military troops to assist the intervention target (TARGET).

TARGHELP: Dummy variable coded 1 if any other state committed military troops to assist the intervention target (TARGET).

COLONY: Categorical variable indicating whether the location of the conflict is a current (1) or former (2) colony, protectorate, or possession of the intervening state on the date the intervention began (stdate). The conflict location is considered a colony, protectorate, or possession of the intervening state if the intervening state is the central governing authority for the territory. Colonial or other dependency relationships and independence dates are identified using the Issue Correlates of War (ICOW) project's Colonial History data set, version 0.4 (http://data.icow.org), the CIA World Factbook (https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/), and the U.S. Department of State's Country Background Notes (http://www.state.gov/r/pa/ei/bgn/).

CONT: Dummy variable indicating that the intervening state shares a land border with the conflict location (LOCATION) or is separated from the conflict location by less than 12 miles of water. The variable coding is generated by the EUGene program based on the COW data (Bennett and Stam, 2000; http://www.eugenesoftware.org).

INTERST: Dummy variable coded 1 if the conflict in which the intervening state intervened was between two internationally recognized states.

Military Intervention Characteristics

FORCEDESCRIP: Brief narrative description of the type of force used by the intervening state.

FORCETYP: Ordinal variable that indicates the type of force used by the intervening state. The highest applicable category is coded.

Coding

1 Display
2 Limited Air/Naval Power
3 Limited Ground Commitment
4 Extensive Airpower
5 Ground Combat

Definitions

Display	The intervening state deployed military personnel that were prepared to use force to the vicinity of the conflict but did not use lethal force or engage in combat operations.
Limited Air/ Naval Power	The intervening state conducted air strikes, engaged in air or naval combat, and/or fired missiles that resulted in fewer than 500 target casualties. No more than 499 ground combat troops were deployed.
Limited Ground Commitment	The intervening state deployed at least 500 but less than 2000 combat-ready ground troops to serve as advisors in combat and/or to conduct small unit raids and commando operations, possibly in combination with the use of limited air/naval power.
Extensive Airpower	The intervening state conducted air strikes, engaged in air or naval combat, and/or fired missiles that resulted in at least 500 target casualties. No more than 1999 ground combat troops were deployed.
Ground Combat	The intervening state deployed more than 2000 combat-ready troops and conducted ground combat operations.

NUMTRPS: Number of intervening state troops at height of intervention. Measured as maximum number of regular military personnel (air, ground, and sea) deployed to the conflict location at any one time during the intervention. When exact numbers cannot be located, coders may estimate from information about the military units, ships, and/or planes deployed. If even estimates are unreliable because of a lack of data or contradictory and ambiguous information, NUMTRPS is coded as missing and only TRPCAT is coded.

TRPCAT: Categorical measure of the number of intervening state troops at height of intervention.

1	Less than 3000 troops
2	3000 to 9999 troops
3	10,000 to 29,999 troops
4	More than 30,000 troops

TRPSRC: Categorical variable indicating the source of the intervening state troops.

2	Intervening state troops already present in the country
3	Both 1 and 2

GRNDTRPS: Dummy variable coded 1 if the intervening state deployed any ground troops to the conflict location.

GRNDCMBT: Dummy variable coded 1 if intervening state ground troops engaged in combat.

DAYS: Duration of military intervention in days.

MNTHS: Duration of military intervention in months.

TARG_INIT: Dummy variable indicating that the intervention target initiated the use of military force against citizens and/or military personnel of the intervening state.

MPCAS: Number of intervening state troops killed during the intervention.

CAS500: Dummy variable coded 1 if at least 500 intervening state troops were killed during the intervention.

TARCAS: Number of target actor combatants killed during the intervention.

PREVINT: Dummy variable indicating that the intervening state conducted a military intervention in this country previously.

Objectives and Outcomes

OBJECT: Brief narrative description of the intervening state's primary political objectives. We define a political objective as the allocation of a valued good (e.g. territory, political authority, resources, security) sought by the political leaders of a state or of a non-state organization. Examples of political objectives frequently pursued in military operations include: the acquisition of territory, seizure of political authority, and maintenance of an allied government's political authority. A state's primary political objectives are the highest-priority tangible political outcomes the state's national leaders have tasked the armed forces with trying to achieve. The attention and resources dedicated to attaining a political objective determine which are primary when a military intervention has several political objectives.

The political objectives of a military intervention can be contrasted with an operation's military objectives, policymakers' motives, and grand strategic motivations.

- Military objectives are the operational goals to be accomplished by the armed forces of a state or opposition movement as a means to achieve the desired political outcome. Examples include the attrition of enemy combatants, destruction of enemy military capacity, seizure of strategic territory, disruption of enemy lines of command and control, and demoralization of enemy soldiers and/or civilians. Under some circumstances an actor's political objective and military objective are the same. A state may, for example, seek only to re-claim a piece of land along its border with another state. In this case, acquiring territory is both the political objective and the military objective, although the state is likely to pursue other military objectives simultaneously as a means to the desired end.

- The domestic political and personal motives of national leaders include the desire to maintain office, increase their personal political power, or enhance their reputation. As Blechman and Kaplan (1978) note, 'Motives… may be singular or multiple in number, subliminally or consciously held, and future or present-oriented' (59).

- Grand strategic motivations are broader goals such as maintaining the credibility of a country's commitments to its allies, preventing the spread of an ideology, sending a message about foreign aggression, reducing the threat of international terrorism, and similar overarching, long-term foreign policy aims. In contrast, the primary political objective of a military operation is a concrete, observable, immediate-term outcome to be attained through the employment of military force. Long-term strategic goals may be more significant to national leaders or more critical to the overall security and prosperity of a state, but these larger goals are generally not well-served when a state fails to attain even the short-term political objectives of a military intervention. A state may, for example, be more concerned about demonstrating the credibility of its commitments to allies than in defending a particular ally, but failing at an attempt to defend an ally through the use of military force is unlikely to enhance the a state's reputation any more than choosing not to use military force.

Blechman and Kaplan (1978) make a very strong case for focusing on objectives rather than motives, noting that 'Motivation is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to determine in any situation' (59), but '…operational objectives tend to be expressed in relatively tangible and specific terms and their satisfaction or non-satisfaction can be judged much more easily. There is much greater agreement among public documents, memoirs, and scholarly studies of incidents as to what the decisionmakers' operational objectives were than as to either fundamental strategic objectives or personal motives' (65).

While larger strategic goals and personal political agendas often motivate the use of force, once a decision to employ force is made national leaders must operationalize these goals by giving their armed forces a directive. Following the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990, President Bush and other decision-makers had a multitude of motives and rationales for responding to the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. Nevertheless, each military operation had a primary political objective; Desert Shield was intended to deter an invasion of Saudi Arabia and Desert Storm was designed to drive Iraq out of Kuwait. The removal of Saddam Hussein's regime, destruction of the Republican Guard, and elimination of the Scud missile threat to Israel were only secondary objectives, notable for the lack of consensus that existed among civilian and military leaders on the time and resources to devote to them (Ciment, 1999; Clodfelter, 2002; Gordon and Trainor, 1995; U.S. Department of Defense, 1992).

Although it happens less frequently than one might expect, the primary political objective of a military intervention can change dramatically during the course of an intervention. When the original objective is attained and the major power decides to pursue another objective, as the United States did, for example, during its involvement in Korea during the 1950s, the intervention is treated as two operations and the first is coded as a success. For the Korean case, the U.S. military intervention to maintain the South Korean regime is one operation. The push North to the Yalu river to 'liberate' North Korea (i.e., to remove and replace the North Korean regime), is considered a second operation. Without such a distinction, whether the U.S. achieved operational success or failure is ambiguous and factors contributing to the success of the first operation cannot be distinguished from factors contributing to the failure of the second. If, however, the major power changes its PPO because it decides it cannot attain its original objective, the intervention is retained as one case and the outcome is coded as a failure if it terminates and the original political objective was not attained.

OBJCODE: Categorical variable that indicates which of seven categories best represents the intervening state's primary political objective. Coders should use the Boolean decision procedure from Appendix B and the operational definitions below to assign a score for each military intervention.

Coding

1 Maintain/Build Foreign Regime Authority
2 Remove Regime from Power
3 Policy Change
4 Acquire or Defend Territory
5 Maintain Empire
6 Social Protection and Order

Definitions

Remove Foreign Regime. Military force is employed with the intention of removing (i.e., deposing, overthrowing) a foreign regime from power. The intervening state may overthrow and replace a foreign government itself, fight alongside insurgent groups that seek to replace the regime in power, or support foreign invasions by other states attempting to seize power.

Maintain/Build Foreign Regime Authority. Military force is employed in an attempt to preserve the governing authority of an incumbent regime or the existing political institutions in another state. This includes both operations to assist a foreign government with the elimination of a domestic insurgent threat and operations to defend a foreign government against an external threat. This category should also be chosen if the intervening state is attempting to establish and then maintain the political authority of a particular regime or create particular political institutions in a state (i.e., state-building). Military operations do not have to seek the preservation of any particular incumbent leader to be considered interventions for the maintenance of regime authority. Often individual leaders are appointed and replaced as the intervening state sees fit during the course of an intervention. The key criteria is the goal of defeating some perceived threat (external or internal) to a state's sovereignty or system of government. Foreign regime building and maintenance may follow, but should be distinguished from, the use of force to remove a foreign regime from power. Cases should be coded as defense of territory rather than maintenance of political authority if a piece of land, rather than political authority over an entire nation, is in dispute. Cases should be coded as maintenance of empire when the intervening state is attempting to maintain its own political authority, rather than that of an ally.

Maintain Empire. Military force is employed in an attempt to re-assert or maintain the intervening state's own political authority over territory claimed as national homeland by another ethnic group. Cases should be coded as foreign regime maintenance if the conflict location is an independent state (see STATE).

Acquire or Defend Territory. Military force, or the threat of force, is employed to defend, acquire, or reclaim territory. The state may intervene to defend the territory of an ally from an external threat, help an ally acquire territory or reassert authority over previously held territory, or seize territory for itself. Cases are coded as territorial only if a piece of land, rather than political authority over an entire nation, is in dispute.

Policy Change. Military force, or the threat of force, is employed in an attempt to coerce an incumbent regime, group, or leader into change specific policies (foreign or domestic) or behaviors. While many conflicts stem from policy disputes, the primary political objective of an intervention is only policy change when the intervening state wants the targeted adversary to change an objectionable policy of its own accord.

Social Protection and Order. Military force, or the threat of force, is used to protect civilians from violence and/or other human rights abuses; restore social order in a situation of unrest (e.g. violent protests, rioting, looting); or to suppress violence between armed groups within another state. 'Peacekeeping' operations that are actually intended to prop up an incumbent regime or maintain empire should not be coded as social protection and order operations. Similarly, 'humanitarian' operations in which military force is used in an attempt to coerce the incumbent government into changing the way it is treating a minority group within its borders should be coded as policy change operations.

SQ: Dummy variable indicating that the intervening state sought to maintain (rather than revise) the status quo.

OUTCOME: Categorical variable that describes how the intervening state terminated its military intervention

0	Ongoing	Intervention ongoing.
1	Withdrew	Intervening state withdrew it military forces unilaterally without attaining its primary political objective (OBJCODE)

3	Prevailed	Intervening state withdrew its forces after attaining its primary political objective.
4	Negotiated	Intervening state negotiated a settlement that did not result in full attainment of the state's primary political objective.
5	Escalated	Intervening state either attained or abandoned its first primary political objective and increased its war aims.

ATTAIN: Dummy variable coded 1 if the primary political objective of the intervention (see OBJCODE) was attained by the intervening state and maintained for at least 30 days.

ATTAIN6MOS: Dummy variable coded 1 if the primary political objective of the intervention was attained by the intervening state and maintained for at least 6 months after the termination of the intervention (see ENDDATE).

ATTAIN1YR: Dummy variable coded 1 if the primary political objective of the intervention was attained by the intervening state and maintained for at least 1 year after the termination of the intervention (see ENDDATE).

ATTAIN3YRS: Dummy variable coded 1 if the primary political objective of the intervention was attained by the intervening state and maintained for at least 3 years after the termination of the intervention (see ENDDATE).

MAINTAIN: The number of months the primary political objective of the intervention was maintained after the termination of the intervention. This variable varies from zero, when the objective was never attained, to 60, when the objective was maintained for at least five years.

POST_TRPS: Dummy variable indicating that the intervening state maintained a significant troop presence after the intervention end date to enforce the terms of the conflict settlement. Significant = > 5000 troops.

MNF: Dummy variable coded 1 if a multinational peacekeeping force was established and remained in the conflict region after the termination of the intervention.
